

KLONDEX MINES LTD. UPDATE by Greg McCoach

The primary focus of Klondex Mines is to develop their Fire Creek project in Nevada.

Shares of KDX remain strong as the building of their underground is underway. The purple lines on the map below show where the decline will be built in relation to the known gold mineralization discovered from surface drilling. This will quickly allow KDX in my opinion to rapidly add ounces to their resource and give them a much better understanding of the geology and where to drill for more gold. Most of the drilling will take place underground once the decline is completed.

It has been a long wait to get to this point but we now should start to once again get a steady news flow as progress on the decline is announced and an aggressive drill program will be underway. This is where shares of the company could really move to the next levels and begin to attract a buyout.

I think this is a multi-million ounce discovery that will be well north of 3 million ounces before things are all said in done. In reality that may be overly conservative. Fire Creek has been a key project for many years and all the big gold companies in Nevada will be watching very closely as to the progress of KDX.

Klondex is once again a BUY
